FORMER PENDLETONIAN HAS BOTH LEGS BROKEN IN AUTO ACCIDENT

I. D. Howland, former water master for Umatilla county and now assistant water superintendent of eastern Oregon with headquarters at La Grande, lies in a hospital at Ontario with both legs broken and his right foot crushed as the consequence of an auto accident two miles east of Beulah which is 45 miles from Vale. News of the accident, which happened last Saturday, has just been received here.

In speaking of the accident the La Grande Observer of yesterday had the following to say in part:

"Not only is he very seriously hurt but he had to undergo a terrific period of suffering to get to surgical aid. To be hauled 15 miles on a mattress on a wagon through a dark, deep canyon and then loaded on a dinky train and hauled many miles to a doctor was the grueling experience the young man underwent. His wife, who left La Grande to visit at Walla Walla while her husband was to spend 10 days in the interior on water business, has been called to the bedside.

"Many miracles are connected with the distressing accident. George T. Cochran, state water superintendent, and his son Sam, a man named McAllister, also in the employ of the water department, and George Ruckman of Imbler, who owns the machine and drove it, went over with the car but escaped with absolutely no injuries. The Ruckman car was taken by the water officials to a nearby school house to conduct a water hearing and had met another automobile on a grade adjoining the banks of the Upper Malheur river in Malheur county. The machine went over, turning a three-quarter turtle when the two machines attempted to pass.

Hurt by Fall Probably.

"Mr. Howland was probably hurt by the fall, though no one can explain it. He sat with Mr. Ruckman in the front seat, and how he got under the car no one can tell or even guess at though Mr. Ruckman, who has returned to La Grande, ventures the guess that both legs were broken by falling on a rock and that the machine crushed his foot. The three men lifted the heavy car, itself a miracle, and extracted the suffering man. To get him a doctor was the next task. Had the legs been broken by the car falling on them it is argued the breaks would have been less clean and sharp than they are.

Mr. Ruckman took him in a wagon to Juntura, a distance of fifteen miles, and this trip was made largely at night with the team held in a slow walk. Mr. Howland bore the terrific pain with marvelous fortitude and kept his nerve to the end. To get him to the hospital was a long trip and the difficulties of setting the breaks were of course acute. It was first believed that the right leg was broken twice above the knee, but this was denied when careful examination was given him.

"Mr. Cochran, his son and others of the party went back to Beulah where Mrs. Cochran and her young daughter were staying while the men made the trip to the meeting.

Pitching Twenty-One Innings Didn't Hurt Marquard of Giants and Adams of Pirates

Rube Marquard.

"Babe" Adams.

Many baseball fans who wondered at the achievement of Rube Marquard of the New York Giants and "Babe" Adams of the Pittsburgh Pirates, in pitching twenty-one innings Saturday, nevertheless felt both men would be injured by the overwork. Twenty-one innings meant two and one-third games of baseball. Usually pitchers work over four days and do less work than these two did in less than four hours.

But Marquard worked his regular turn Wednesday against Cincinnati and won his game in fine form.

There has been nothing to show that Adams suffered from his hard work. He will take his regular turn in the box for Pittsburgh, and if he shows as well as in the long game, he will doubtless win many for his club during the remainder of the season.

NEW COMET IS TO BE SEEN IN MORNING SKIES

Amateur astronomers who are equipped with a small telescope or with good field glasses may find an object of absorbing interest in the northeastern sky during the early morning hours. The Delevan comet, which was discovered last December, is now approaching perihelion and for a few weeks will be plainly visible.

The comet is now traversing the constellation Auriga, which may be identified by the brilliant yellow star Capella in the northeastern part of the heavens shortly before dawn. Owing to the effect of the sunlight which strikes the upper strata of the atmosphere before the sun rises above the horizon, the comet hardly will be visible to the naked eye. The comet now appears as a star of the fifth magnitude, which is on the borderland of visibility. However, with the aid of a telescope it is a conspicuous object.

For eight months astronomers have been watching the Delevan comet, named for its discoverer. It was first sighted in the southern hemisphere, and so rapid was its approach to the sun that within a short time it became visible to observers in the north. Its orbit has been traced accurately during the time it has been under observation, and astronomers estimate that it will pass within 10,000,000 miles of the sun in October. As the comet is now speeding toward the sun, within a short time it will disappear in its rays. After passing perihelion it is doubtful if it can be seen save only in the larger instruments.

For many centuries mankind believed that the appearance of a comet foreboded ill. Flood, fire, death and plague were attributed to the malign influence of the celestial wanderers, and it has been only within the last 200 or 400 years that the true nature of these interesting celestial objects became known. In the light of modern science the superstition which has surrounded comets has disappeared. Now they are regarded as highly interesting, but no enlightened person believes that they have the slightest effect on earthly things.

Some of the orbits of comets are so enormous that it takes them thousands of years to traverse them, going at a speed which makes the velocity of the earth appear slow. Of many hundreds of comets comparatively few have been catalogued by the astronomers. It is supposed that many of the comets visit the solar system only once. They come rushing by to be refreshed in the rays of the sun, only to pass on to other systems, never to return. However, there are a good many which return periodically, notable among which is Halley's comet, seen in 1910.

Militants Riot in a Court.

BELFAST, Ireland, July 28.—A crowd of militant suffragettes caused a wild tumult in the Assize court and its vicinity, when Miss Dorothy Evans, an official of the Belfast branch of the Women's Social and Political Union, was brought up for trial on the charge of having in her possession explosives for the purpose of committing a felony. Miss Evans had been arrested in the house of the lord mayor of Belfast.

The suffragettes broke windows and savagely assaulted the police. The disturbance was so great that proceedings had to be suspended for a time.

MEN IN REBEL ARMY AWAIT FARM TRACTS

200 ACRES ALLOTTED TO EACH AS SOON AS REVOLUTION IS OVER.

Many Already Pick Their Farms—Life in Barracks Is Easy Affair With Drills Few and Far Between—Soldiers Take It Easy in Mexico Following Campaign.

(By a United Press Staff Correspondent.)

MATAMOROS, Mex., July 28.—There are three hundred constitutionalist soldiers in the barracks here, under Major T. Orozco, and every man of them expects to be the owner of 200 acres of Mexican land when the revolution is finished. Many, indeed, have already tentatively picked out the plots of ground they expect to farm.

Lieut. Jose d'Antin Zuboga of the Ninth regiment, sucking his corn husk cigarette on a plaza bench before the hotel Montezuma, surrounded by a dozen or so of his comrades, privates, non-coms and commissioned officers, so summed up the feeling of the men behind the guns of the Carranza-Villa forces in relation to the Mexican land problem.

"We will get the land," he said. He translated his statement into Mexican for the benefit of the men about him. They nodded emphatically.

"But if you don't?"

"Then the revolution won't be finished."

Jose Zuboga fought with Madero through his revolution. With Madero president he was given a position in the customs service at Laredo but when the news of the assassination came he hurried to El Paso and joined Villa. He has been fighting ever since. As a lieutenant he draws three pesos per day from the constitutionalist paymaster, and provides his own keep.

A block off the Plaza Independencia on the Calle Manuel Gonzales are the constitutionalist barracks. A half dozen typical Mexican houses, two stories high, built flush with the narrow walk on the narrow street, iron barred windows and rickety balconies, provide quarters for the men and their women. A blue shirted and khaki trousered sentry slouches up and down the shady side of the street. In an open doorway a mixture of soldiers in khaki, women and a flock of babies are gathered. Out in the dust a young soldier of about eighteen months is bitterly contesting with a man's dog for the possession of what appears to be a bowl of mush. It looks as though it were to be the dog's long deferred day, when an accurately thrown watermelon rind hurries out of the doorway and strikes the cur in the ribs, whereupon he retreats snarling. The body buries its dirty fist in the mess in the bowl and the women laugh.

Life in the constitutionalist barracks is far from strenuous. There are few if any drills. Four times a day the three companies line up along the street and answer to the roll call. Of these assemblages the one at noon is most important, for it is at this time that the men receive their daily payment of a peso and a half of constitutionalist paper money. In the organization of the constitutionalist army when a man enlists he is given a uniform, generally consisting of a khaki jacket, riding trousers, leggings or leather puttees, a cartridge belt and a Mauser. A private is paid a peso and a half each day, non-coms two pesos, second lieutenants three and captains four. Out of this they provide their own food. With restaurants costing a peso and a half a private could not exist were it not for the women. But with his woman to prepare his meal over a community charcoal fire, the soldier can get along in greater luxury and with less work than ever before in his lowly existence.

Discipline is lax. Nominally the city is under martial law. At five o'clock a half dozen sentries at outposts clatter in on ponies and the same number go out to take their places. Several loll about the end of the international bar. At the ferry station on the Rio Grande an energetic young Mexican, armed with a ferocious looking "cat" and a double of cartridges lays in wait for you, coming and going, and extracts a head tax of ten centavos, or five cents American, for which he gives a neatly printed receipt stating you have contributed this amount to the constitutionalist war chest. Very thrifty, the military authorities, when they captured Matamoros took over the public utilities. The civil officers on the mule power street cars also give a receipt when he collects another ten centavo piece.

Three months of barracks life has worn on Zuboga. A friend calls him from the doorway of the telegraph office and whispers to him excitedly. He comes back beaming. Orders have just come for the transfer of a number of officers to the south. He is off to headquarters to put in his request. With him go two American boys, one twenty and the other twenty three, to see if they cannot get into action likewise.

"Why did you enlist?" I asked one of them. He refused to give his name but said he came from Dayton, Ohio. "It's more fun than working in a glass factory," he answered. "Any time I want to leave I can quit. That's part of our bargain. As soon as I can talk Mexican they have promised to make me an officer. They pay me three pesos as it is. And then," he added, "you can't tell. This does they hand about that land distribution may be the goods. They all think so. And if it is I know a two hundred acre patch back here a ways, that would raise the finest corn and alfalfa in the world. I'd like to get it."

PERSIA'S YOUNGEST RULER TAKES OFFICE

Sultan Ahmed Mirza

TEHRAN, Persia, July 28.—Since taking the oath of office as Persia's ruler, Shah Ahmed Mirza has shown but little interest in the affairs of state. All state business is being transacted by his advisors. When the young shah was crowned in the palace at the national council, the crown was so large that he had to hold it in position while the chief mullah was making a brief oration.

Boys "Movie Show" Burns.

SPOKANE, Wash., July 28.—A toy moving picture theater in a piano-box playhouse, furnished the thrills and a "sure enough" fire panic at Molson, Wash.

Elmer Larson's two small sons filled their toy moving picture machine in the piano box with gasoline and applied a match. The piano box instantly was in flames and escape was cut off. The boys shrieked in chorus. A resourceful mother literally chopped her sons to safety in the nick of time.
